“Gone, but not forgotten. Jesse bought some bulbs to plant and I was thinking, why? He was so ill and I thought, "why exert the energy?" He said that it was to leave something behind, and when they bloomed people would remember him and see the beauty and know what a good gardener he was. He worked on his house so hard! He was still putting molding up in the house the week before he passed away! He found some pretty ornaments at the dollar store for Christmas and hung them on the wall in his room. He was very spiritual. The funniest thing about him, was that he liked to color in coloring books to relax! Jesse was a "character". He never quit fighting. I was his hospice nurse.
